GERALDINE APPONYI APPONYI DESIGNS

'One of the best parts of my job,' says Geraldine Apponyi, 'is understanding how my client lives, and creating a home that, even in just small ways, makes their life a little more practical and a little more beautiful.'

Apponyi started off her creative career as an assistant in set and costume design at London's Almeida theatre and the National Theatre before cutting her teeth in interior design with a major hotel in Times Square, New York. 'It was a baptism of fire,' she recalls.

Clients are often Europeans, 'usually very considered about their priorities and what they want to invest in,' says Apponyi, 'and luckily enough almost all of them have had very good taste.'

She describes her style as classic contemporary; a broad description that translates as practical, with quality in details and tailored to the client.

NIKKI ATKINSON NIKKI ATKINSON

Since 1990, Atkinson has been the top choice for bankers, hedgies and international types (including jewellery house heiresses) who want classical and immaculate English interiors with a contemporary twist.

Based between London and Oxfordshire, she specialises in the architectural, interior design and project management of residential properties, working with clients across the UK, Europe and the USA.

PAOLO MOSCHINO NICHOLAS HASLAM

Moschino is an award-winning designer and savvy businessman. In 1995 he bought Nicholas Haslam and bulked up the interior design company with two London retail showrooms and a Chelsea Harbour showroom. Haslam and Moschino worked together for eight years before the decision was made to split the firm in two.

Whether it's a private home in Holland Park, South of France or New York, Moschino gives a palazzo patina to the rooms he designs, through sophisticated wallpapers, antique furniture and the occasional dash of hot colour. The firm has an extensive range of lighting, fabrics and furniture, and also source and sell antiques.
